FEDERAL MOVEMENT.

THE CARDINAL'S CANDIDATURE.

The subject of the Cardinal's candidature has been the last few days being much discussed in religious circles, with the result that there is a general consensus of opinion that it would be wiser to select a layman for the office of president of the convention, and then to select a Cardinal for the office of president of the convention.

The first made to select a bunch of 10 candidates, and ran them in the hope of destroying the chances of the Cardinal being elected a member of the Convention. The first difficulty which the gentlemen who will go into conference will have to overcome is that the selection of a layman for the office of president of the convention will be a great deal more difficult than the selection of a Cardinal for the office of president of the convention.

traying in opposition to the Churches the friends and supporters of the Government. The Government was thus creating a split in what should be a united and powerful party, the selectors of the bench would not strengthen but merely weaken their position. And it was realized, that the very fact of the Government's decision to leave the Government would probably simply result in the defeat of those selected, whereas if they were not specially pointed to as the chosen of the Churches they would receive the votes of many Roman Catholics who, directly they knew that these candidates were put forward by the Churches, would withhold their support, and thus candidates who were in every way desirable might be by the action of the representatives of the power, and in the event of any conflict of obligation he would owe primary allegiance to the power which invested him with the Cardinalate, and he himself would be the first to glory in this. It is no longer contemplated that he will do these and other things in the presence of so many desirable candidates offering their services, the representatives of the Protestant Churches in meeting assembled to protest against his candidature.

It was reported in the city last night that the Cardinal would not only have the whole strength of the Orange Institution brought to bear in opposition to his candidature, but the Masonic fraternity, recognising the antipathy of the Vatican to Freemasonry, would exert its influence against the elec-

MR. CARRUTHERS AT ASHFIELD.
The Hon. J. H. Carruthers, Minister for Lands, delivered an address on federation last evening to a largely attended meeting, which was held at the Ashfield Town Hall. The platform was occupied by the Mayor (Alderman J. Upwood). Among the other gentlemen who occupied seats on the platform were the Rev. J. E. Carruthers, the Rev. Dr. Corlette, Messrs. Hawthorne, Bavieter, and Ball, Mr. L.A., Joseph Abbott, Mark Hammond, J. P. Gray, Lachlan, and Josephson.

Mr. Carruthers, who was received with enthusiasm, commenced by recapitulating the salient points in the history of the colony, and said their record was a

It was strong that she could withstand attack by any enemy. If they wanted to realise what the danger was, they confronted them at present were they had had to reflect upon the barriers created between the several colonies largely because of the selfish interests of the people. He next touched upon the vastness of the empire in regard to the railways in the several colonies. Rival colonies were having the same postal services. There was a lack of co-operation in regard to economy in those matters, and the taxpayer suffered. Then in regard to defence, if an enemy landed on any part of Australia they would not be able to move troops to defend the territory until after seven days.

Although they had 55,000 troops, these troops were actually a rope of sand, because there was no coherent policy of concentration. The troops were scattered all over the continent, where they were against a common enemy. The difficulties were encountered then were not diminishing, but were actually increasing. The existing evils were becoming intensified. They had had brotherhood preached to the utmost but practised very little. Fear, hate, fear. What was required was concerted action—a union of interests under the bond of legislation. He discussed the difficulties they had heard of in the identical words those which were used in the American federation was formed. They had in Australia a sufficiently large population to warrant their federating, they had a sufficiently large revenue that they had the same glaring defects as were ex-result in a union would be an abundance of commerce, and the trade would flow into its natural channels, and it would be a settlement of the matter which were fettered chains upon the wrists of our fellow-colonists. It was an absolute farce to seek by statute to restrict the God-given right of neighbours to carry on trade and intercourse with one another. (Applause.) He was going to favour any bold system of federation which was a mere sentiment without the reality. (Cheers.) He was not in favour of a plan of federation which sought to postpone the settlement of the fiscal difficulties until some distant date. If they were going to do so, on whatever they would have to federate in their hearts or on all, (Applause.) If, then, he had a wise action proper use. The sooner they removed the cause of allusion in regard to their railways the better it would be for the whole community. The system which did not provide for the federalisation of the railways was a system which would leave half of the ulcer ranking in the community, only to burst out with violence. The system which would result in the postal and telegraph systems of the colonies being more economically worked than they were at present, and in the establishment of a common and effective system of defence. Then instead of requiring it Houses of Parliament to be in harmony before they could legislate upon matters of common concern it would only be neces-parl to the islands in the South Sea, the colonies would be able to speak with a united voice, instead of being divided into a number of feeble and weak states. In the past, foreign nations had been enabled to establish themselves at New Guinea and other islands, so that they were now virtually titmials at our gates. We could not prevent the recurrence of those things so long as we spoke in the like tones of isolated communities. (Applause.)

The constitution of the Commonwealth should be revised so as to meet the urgent patent requirements of the time. It should not aim at preserving too much. It should be sensitive to the demands to open up commerce, to place Federal control of the railways would result in the most economical working. Whatever form of federal regard to all its affairs. Mr. Carruthers spoke with great earnestness in advocacy of Sydney being recognised as the federal city. He was not, he said, prepared to hand over the question of the federal city to those who were getting such great gifts from a colony in regard to federation. (Applause.) He was not in favour of the arrogances of any party seeking to have 10 party representatives sent to the Convention. (Applause.) He deprecated any attempt to introduce sectarian differences or sectarian cries into this election. (Applause.) He was in favour of federation under the Crown. That was the best form of federation they could have. (Applause.)

On the motion of Mr. Baxister, seconded by known and expressing the fondest sentiments in Caruthers as a candidate, was carried by acclamation.

The usual compliment was accorded to the chairman.

MR. EDMUND BARTON AT

evening held at the balcony of the New Town Hall by Mr. Edmund Barton in support of his candidature for a seat on the Federal Council the chair was taken by Mr. E. W. Mc-Carthy, M.L.A., and amongst those supporting him

Mr. Barton, on coming forward to address his audience, was greeted by a hearty welcome. His subject, he said, of the approaching election was a subject of great importance which would have to be submitted to Parliament and to the people for approval. He maintained that unless a candidate was favourable to the framing of a federal constitution under Crown he had no right to be elected. (Applause.) He thought the Australian people agreed to a federal constitution it would have been a great triumph for the Imperial Parliament. He had no doubt that the colonies did arrive at such an agreement the Imperial Parliament would be only too ready to accept it, because there was no disposition in these in their aspirations after progress. (Applause.) for himself, it was a matter of duty for him to be forward on the present occasion, because if he did not so he would be called a renegade to the cause he had for years past earnestly asserted in favour of federation. Some people asserted that federation was an organisation for handing over the rights and liberties of the people of New South Wales to the people of the other colonies, whilst there would have the constitution so widened that it would wipe out the individuality of the different colonies. The "Prudent Federalists" were in favour of something that was not federation. On
